

Wind in the Bridgers

Activity

Snowmobiling

Can confirm, it was blowing in the Bridgers. Up high it was still cool enough that a fair amount of snow was moving around, especially further north. Clouds of snow were coming off of the ridges and moving through the bowls near Fairy Lake and Fraiser divide. Around the of the Throne and in the mid elevations we found better, more sheltered snow conditions. The area around Ross Peak was very scoured. We saw a handful of small point releases on steep south slopes, likely from Friday, but no other recent avalanche activity. By mid-day/early afternoon, the snow lower down in the woods was getting pretty heavy and wet and anywhere with the slightest bit of sun exposure was developing a crust. Talked to a few skiers who toured in the Naya Nuki area, and they described variable snow and very windy conditions.
